Practice

Louis is an experienced and skilled advocate. Having called to the English Bar in 1998 he built up a substantial and well respected criminal practice. He conducted cases on behalf of Revenue and Customs Prosecutions Office, the Financial Services Authority and the Crown Prosecution Service. He regularly represented individuals and companies prosecuted by those agencies as well as by the Health and Safety Executive, the Serious Fraud Office and the Environment Agency.

In 2005, through the Bar Human Rights Committee, he spent 4 months in Kingston, Jamaica assisting in the preparation and presentation of first instance and appellate capital murder cases.

In 2006 he returned to Scotland where he quickly established a well-regarded practice and a reputation for thorough, independent and intelligent advocacy. He has regularly appeared before the High Court of Justiciary (both first instance and appellate) as well as before the Court of Session and the Solicitors' Disciplinary Tribunal. He has regularly advised on Proceeds of Crime, Judicial Review and was involved in the early stages of the Rosepark Nursing Home Inquiry.

Louis' move to Compass in 2010 enables him to focus more clearly on regulatory work and to build upon his extensive experience in England. He has a particular interest in the burgeoning area of professional discipline. The move also allows him to build upon his record in Human Rights.
